Ump's Decision Displeases Both Yanks, White Sox

Hurley enjoyed the distinction today of making a decision that displeased both teams.

The controversial play occurred Wednesday in the seventh inning of the New York Yankees' 11-6 victory over the Chicago White Sox. Andy Carey of the Yenkees, at bat with the bases filled and one out, hit a potential double play ground-er to second baseman Nelson Fox. Fox fielded the ball cleanly and stepped into the baseline to tag Hank Bauer, running from first base. In the next instant, Fox was hit by a charging Bauer, staggered and threw too late to retire Carey. Hurley ruled interference by Bauer and ordered all the runners back to their bases. So, instead of two out, one run in and two runners on base the Yankees had two out, the bases filled and Mickey Mantle Batting.

Bauer hit Fox and interfered with him before Fox made the Hurley stated. "Therefore Bauer was out and the ball dead. All the runners had to return to their bases.'

"The base line belonged to Bauer," Manager Casey Stengel of the Yankees said. "It shouldn't have been interference."

"Bauer obviously interfered," said Manager Marty Marion of the White Sox. "He should have called it a double play and we'd have been out of the inning without a run scored.

Mantle, who didn't say a word furing the 10-minute argument, resolved both the dispute and the game a few moments later when ne hammered a grand slam homer into the right field bullpen. "I told Clint Courtney the White

Sox' catcher while they were arguing," Mantle said. "I said what are they yakking about— don't they know I'm gonna hit one outta

PROGRESS IS BEING MADE on the approach to the Ohio River bridge at Old Shawneetown, as well as on the bridge itself. Top photograph shows the two concrete supports at what will be the Market street underpass in Old Shawneetown. One more support will be constructed. The center photo left was taken on Market street looking toward the levee and new bridge. House in photo is being readied for move. Bulldozer in center right photo is shown stirring up one of many brush piles to help it burn quickly. Clearing operations are proceeding both ways from the underpass work, and other approach work has now commenced just outside New Shawneetown en route to the bridge. Steel is finding a place atop the huge supports of the actual bridge in the lower photo. Work on the approach is expected to speed up materially now that the contract for the dirt fill has been let.
